O Thou! by Nature taught
To breathe her genuine thought
In numbers warmly pure and sweetly strong---
O chaste unboastful Nymph! to thee I call---
O sister meek of Truth!
To my admiring youth
Thy sober aid and native charms infuse---
Tho' taste, tho' genius, bless
To some divine excess,
Faint's the cold work till thou inspire the whole---
Thou, only thou, canst raise the meeting soul---
I only seek to find thy temp'rate vale,
Where oft my reed might sound
To maids and shepherds round,
And all thy sons, O Nature! learn my tale.

Come, Pity! come; by Fancy's aid
Ev'n now my thoughts, relenting Maid!
Thy temple's pride design-----
There Picture's toils shall well relate
How Chance or hard involving Fate
O'er mortal blifs prevail:
The buskin'd Muse shall near her stand,
And, sighing, prompt her tender hand
With each disastrous tale.
There let me oft, retir'd by day,
In dreams of passion melt away,
Allow'd with thee to dwell;
There waste the mournful lamp of night,
Till, Virgin! thou again delight
To hear a British shell.

LIFE OF COLLINS.

AS the greater part of men of genius, who have borne no public character, have passed their lives in obscurity, it seldom happens that any memoirs can be collected respecting them of sufficient importance to claim the notice of the biographer. We therefore find few other accounts of the author of the following poems, than such as occur in the life of every man; yet these memoirs, simple as they are, respecting the man, will not be unacceptable to those who admire the poet; for if we derive intellectual pleasure from his productions, a kind of instinctive curiosity will be excited to become acquainted with the source from which it springs.

William Collins was born at Chichester, about the year 1721. His father, who was a respectable tradesman in that city, intending him for the service of the church, with this view he was admitted scholar of Winchester College, under the tuition of the learned Dr. Burton. At the age of nineteen, he had acquired a sufficient degree of merit to entitle him to a distinguished rank in the list of those scholars who are elected upon the foundation of Winchester to New College, Oxford; but as there was then no vacancy in that society, he was admitted a commoner of Queen's, where he continued till July 1741, when he was elected a Demy of Magdalen College, in which he resided during his stay at the University.

It is observed, that while a student, he evinced much genius and great indolence in his literary productions, as his exercises, in the opinion of the most impartial judges, bore evident characteristics of both. This remissness might probably arise in some measure from disappointment in the outset of life. He had no doubt entertained very high ideas of the academical mode of education; yet when he entered upon the more abstruse studies, his ardour in the pursuit seems to have been abated by the perplexities he had to encounter, and his genius was too volatile to pore over the intricate and puzzling problems of Euclid.

While he was at Magdalen College, he became a votary to the Muses, and wrote the epistle to Sir Thomas Hanmer, and the Oriental Eclogues, which, in the year 1742, were first published, under the title of "Persian Eclogues." Having made these advances in his poetical career, he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts, in 1744, left the university, and came to London, a literary adventurer, with many projects in his head, and very little money in his pocket.

To a man of a liberal mind, without fortune, without patronage, the metropolis is a very dangerous place, and our author had not long been in it, before the truth of this observation was fully verified. His pecuniary resources were soon exhausted; and though he wanted not the power of restoring them by the exertions of genius and learning, he had neither steadiness nor industry. His necessities indeed sometimes carried him as far as a plan or a title page. He designed many works, but his want of resolution, or the frequent calls of immediate necessity, broke his schemes, and suffered him to pursue no settled purpose. "A man," as Dr. Johnson observes, "doubtful of his dinner, or trembling at a creditor, is not much disposed to abstracted meditation, or remote inquiries." He published proposals for a history of the Revival of Learning, and made some observations to his friends on the subjects he intended to introduce; but it does not appear that a page of the history was ever written. He planned several tragedies, but he only planned them; in short, he became in idea an historian, a critic, and a dramatic poet, by turns; but it was only in idea, for whether it was the effect of dissipation, or the prevalence of indolence; he never carried one of these plans into execution.

This want of resolution of course subjected him to the greatest distresses. He depended day by day for subsistence on the long repeated contributions of a friend, or the generosity of a casual acquaintance. In fact, neither want, shame, the anxieties of poverty, nor the servility of dependence could animate resolution to perseverance. At length, in 1746, he had spirit enough to exert himself so far as to publish his Odes Descriptive and Allegorical; but as the sale was by no means equal to his expectations, he conceived an indignation for a tasteless age, and burnt the remaining copies with his own hands.

About this time he became acquainted with Dr. Johnson, who speaks of him in very respectable terms. He says, "his appearance was decent and manly; his knowledge considerable; his views extensive; his conversation elegant, and his disposition cheerful." By degrees the doctor gained his confidence, and one day was admitted to him when he was immured by a bailiff that was prowling in the street. On this occasion recourse was had to the booksellers, who, on the credit of a translation of Aristotle's Poetics, which he engaged to write, with a large commentary, advanced as much money as enabled him to escape into the country. Dr. Johnson says, that Collins shewed him the guineas safe in his hand.

Under these circumstances, so mortifying to every just expectation, when neither his wants were relieved, nor his reputation extended, he found some consolation in visiting his uncle, Colonel Martin, who was at that time with his regiment in Flanders. Soon after the Colonel died and left Collins about two thousand pounds, a sum which the poet could scarcely think exhaustible, and which he did not live to exhaust. The guineas he had borrowed of the bookseller were then repaid, and the translation, from his natural indolence, of course neglected.

Dr. Johnson, with his usual energy, observes, "that as man is not born for happiness, so Collins, who while he studied to live, felt no evil but poverty, no sooner lived to study, than his life was assailed by the more dreadful calamities of disease and infirmity:" and we cannot more effectually do justice to the character of our author, than by transcribing it from the pen of that nervous and elegant writer.

"Mr. Collins," says the Doctor, "was a man of extensive literature and of vigorous faculties. He was acquainted not only with the classic writers, both Latin and Greek, but with the Italian, French, and Spanish languages. He had employed his mind chiefly upon works of fiction and subjects of fancy, and by indulging some peculiar habits of thought, was eminently delighted with those flights of imagination which pass the bounds of Nature, and to which the mind is reconciled only by a passive acquiescence in popular traditions. He loved fairies, genii, giants, and monsters; he delighted to rove through the meanders of enchantment, to gaze on the magnificence of golden palaces, to repose by the water-falls of Elysian gardens.

"This was however the character rather of his inclination than his genius; the grandeur of wildness, and the novelty of extravagance, were always desired by him, but were not always attained. Yet as diligence is never wholly lost, if his efforts sometimes caused harshness and obscurity, they likewise produced in happier moments sublimity and splendour. This idea which he had formed of excellence, led him to oriental fictions and allegorical imagery, and perhaps while he was intent upon description, he did not sufficiently cultivate sentiment. His poems are the production of a mind not deficient in force, nor unfurnished with knowledge either of books or of life, but somewhat obstructed in its progress by deviation in quest of mistaken beauties.

"His morals were pure, and his opinions pious; in a long continuance in poverty, and long habits of dissipation it cannot be expected that any character should be exactly uniform.— There is a degree of want by which the freedom of agency is almost destroyed; and long association with fortuitous companions, will at last relax the strictness of truth and abate the fervor of sincerity. That this man, wise and virtuous as he was, passed always unentangled through the snares of life, it would be prejudice and temerity to affirm; but it may be said, that at least he preserved the source of action unpolluted, that his principles were never shaken, that his distinctions of right and wrong were never confounded, and that his faults had nothing of malignity or design, but proceeded from unexpected pressure or casual temptation.

“The latter part of his life cannot be remembered but with pity and sadness. He languished some years under that depression of mind which unchains the faculties without destroying them, and leaves reason the knowledge of right without the power of pursuing it. These clouds which he perceived gathering on his intellects, he endeavoured to disperse by travel, and passed into France, but found himself constrained to yield to his malady, and returned. He was for some time confined in a house of lunatics, and afterwards returned to the care of his sister in Chichester, where death, in 1756, came to his relief.

“After his return from France, the writer of this character paid him a visit at Islington, where he was waiting for his sister whom he had directed to meet him: there was then nothing of disorder discernible in his mind by any but himself; but he had withdrawn from study, and travelled with no other book than an English Testament, such as children carry to school: when his friend took it into his hand, out of curiosity to see what companion a man of letters had chosen, ‘I have but one book,’ says Collins, ‘but that is the best.’

“Such was the fate of Collins, with whom I once delighted to converse, and whom I yet remember with tenderness.

“He was visited at Chichester, in his last illness by his learned friends Dr. Warton and his brother, to whom he spoke with disapprobation of his Oriental Eclogues, as not sufficiently expressive of Asiatic manners, and called them his Irish Eclogues. He shewed them at the same time an ode inscribed to Mr. John Hume, which they thought superior to his other works, but which no search has yet found.

“His disorder was not alienation of mind, but general laxity and feebleness, a deficiency rather of his vital than intellectual powers: what he spoke wanted neither judgment nor spirit, but a few minutes exhausted him, so that he was forced to rest upon the couch till a short cessation restored his powers, and he was again able to talk with his former vigour.

“The approaches of this dreadful malady he began to feel soon after his uncle’s death, and with the usual weakness of men so diseased, eagerly snatched that temporary relief with which the table and the bottle flatter and seduce. But his health continually declined, and he grew more and more burthened to himself.

“To what I have formerly said of his writings may be added, that his diction was often harsh, unskilfully laboured, and injudiciously selected. He affected the obsolete when it was not worthy of revival; he puts his words out of the common order, seeming to think with some later candidates for fame, that not to write prose is certainly to write poetry. His lines commonly are of slow motion, clogged and impeded with clusters of consonants. As men are often esteemed who cannot be loved, so the poetry of Collins may sometimes extort praise when it gives little pleasure.”

Notwithstanding the rigour with which this great critic comments on the productions even of his acknowledged friends, the poems of Collins are held in high estimation, as appears from the pains bestowed by a writer of evident ability on his Oriental Eclogues, and the selection of his Ode on the Passions, which, as peculiarly adapted to display the powers of speech, and call forth all the pathos and animation of the most accomplished orators, has been the subject of recital in all the readings that have lately been so liberally patronized in the metropolis and the most populous places in the kingdom.

A monument of the most exquisite workmanship has been erected by public subscription to Collins. He is finely represented as just recovered from a wild fit of phrensy to which he was unhappily subject, and in a calm and reclining posture, seeking refuge from his misfortunes in the consolations of the Gospel, while his lyre and one of the first of his poems lie neglected on the ground. Above are two beautiful figures of Love and Pity entwined in each others arms. The whole was executed by the ingenious Flaxman, at that time lately returned from Rome, and if any thing can equal the expressive sweetness of the sculpture, it is the following most excellent epitaph, written by Mr. Hayley.

Ye who the merits of the dead revere,
 Who hold misfortune's sacred genius dear,
 Regard this tomb, wher Collins, hapless name,
 Solicits kindness with a double claim.
 Tho' Nature gave him, and th' Science taught
 The fire of Fancy, and the reach of thought,
 Severely doom'd to Penury's extreme,
 He pass'd in madd'ning pain life's fev'rish dream,
 While rays of genius only serv'd to shew
 The thick'ning horror, and exalt his woe.
 Ye walls that echo'd to his frantic moan,
 Guard the due records of this grateful stone;

Strangers to him, enamour'd of his lays,
This fond memorial to his talents raise.
For this the ashes of a bard require,
Who touch'd the tend'rest notes of Pity's lyre;
Who join'd pure faith to strong poetic powers,
Who, in reviving Reason's lucid hours,
Sought on one book his troubled mind to rest,
And rightly deem'd the book of God the best.

CEASE, fair Aurelia! cease to mourn;
Lament not Hannah's happy state:
You may be happy in your turn,

AN EPISTLE

ADDRESSED TO SIR THOMAS HANMER,

On his Edition of Shakespeare's Works†.

WHILE born to bring the Muses happier days,
A patriot's hand protects a poet's lays;
While, nurs'd by you, she sees her myrtles bloom
Green and unwither'd o'er his honour'd tomb;
Excuse her doubts if yet she fears to tell
What secret transports in her bosom swell:
With conscious awe she hears the critic's fame,
And blushing hides her wreath at Shakespeare's name.
Hard was the lot those injur'd strains endur'd,
Unown'd by Science, and by years obscur'd;
Fair Fancy wept; and echoing sighs confess
A fix'd despair in every tuneful breast.
Not with more grief th' afflicted swains appear
When wint'ry winds deform the plenteous year;
When ling'ring frosts the ruin'd seats invade
Where Peace resorted and the Graces play'd.

* This was Mr. Collins's first production.

† This poem was written by our author at the university about the time when Sir Thomas Hanmer's pompous edition of Shakespeare was printed at Oxford. If it has not so much merit as the rest of his poems, it has still more than the subject deserves. The versification is easy and elegant, and the allusions always poetical. The character of the poet Fletcher, in particular, is very justly drawn in this Epistle.

Each rising art by just gradation moves;
 Toil builds on toil, and age on age improves:
 The Mule alone unequal dealt her rage,
 And grac'd with noblest pomp her earliest stage: 20
 Preserv'd through time the speaking scenes impart
 Each changeful wish of Phædra's tortur'd heart;
 Or paint the curse that mark'd the Theban's reign*,
 A bed incestuous, and a father slain:
 With kind concern our pitying eyes o'erflow, 25
 Trace the sad tale, and own another's woe.

To Rome remov'd, with wit secure to please,
 The Comic Sisters kept their native ease.
 With jealous fear declining Greece beheld
 Her own Menander's art almost excell'd; 30
 But every Mule essay'd to raise in vain
 Some labour'd rival of her tragic strain:
 Ilyssus' laurels tho' transferr'd with toil,
 Droop'd their fair leaves, nor knew th' unfriendly soil.

As Arts expir'd resistless Dulness rose; 35
 Goths, Priests, or Vandals—all were Learning's foes,
 Till Julius* first recall'd each exil'd maid,
 And Cosmo own'd them in th' Etrurian shade:
 Then deeply skill'd in Love's engaging theme,
 The soft Provincial pass'd to Arno's stream: 40
 With graceful ease the wanton lyre he strung,
 Sweet flow'd the lays—but love was all he sung:
 The gay description could not fail to move,
 For, led by Nature, all are friends to love.

But heav'n, still various in its works, decreed 45
 The perfect boast of time should last succeed.
 The beauteous union must appear at length
 Of Tuscan fancy and Athenian strength;
 One greater Muse Eliza's reign adorn,
 And e'en a Shakespeare to her fame be born! 50

Yet, ah! so bright her morning's opening ray,
 In vain our Britain hop'd an equal day!
 No second growth the Western Isle could bear,
 At once exhausted with too rich a year.

* The Oedipus of Sophocles.

† Julius II. the immediate predecessor of Leo X.

Too nicely Jonson knew the critic's part ; 55
 Nature in him was almost lost in art.
 Of softer mould the gentle Fletcher came,
 And next in order, as the next in name :
 With pleas'd attention 'midst his scenes we find
 Each glowing thought that warms the female mind ;
 Each melting sigh and every tender tear, 61
 The lover's wishes, and the virgin's fear.
 His every strain the Smiles and Graces own*,
 But stronger Shakespeare felt for man alone :
 Drawn by his pen, our ruder passions stand 65
 Th' unrivall'd picture of his early hand.

With gradual steps and slow, exacter France†
 Saw Art's fair empire o'er her shores advance ;
 By length of toil a bright perfection knew,
 Correctly bold, and just in all she drew ; 70
 Till late Corneille, with Lucan's‡ spirit fir'd,
 Breath'd the free strain, as Rome and he inspir'd ;
 And classic judgment gain'd to sweet Racine
 The temp'rate strength of Maro's chaster line.

But wilder far the British laurel spread, 75
 And wreaths less artful crown our poet's head ;
 Yet he alone to every scene could give
 Th' historian's truth, and bid the manners live.
 Wak'd at his call, I view, with glad surprise,
 Majestic forms of mighty monarchs rise. 80
 There Henry's trumpets spread their loud alarms,
 And laurel'd Conquest waits her hero's arms !
 Here gentler Edward claims a pitying sigh,
 Scarce born to honours, and so soon to die !
 Yet shall thy throne, unhappy Infant ! bring 85
 No beam of comfort to the guilty king :

* Their characters are thus distinguished by Mr. Dryden.

† About the time of Shakespeare the poet Hardy was in great repute in France. He wrote, according to Fontenelle, six hundred plays. The French poets after him applied themselves in general to the correct improvement of the stage, which was almost totally disregarded by those of our own country, Jonson excepted.

‡ The favourite author of the elder Corneille.

The time shall come when Glo'ster's heart shall bleed*
 In life's last hours with horror of the deed;
 When dreary visions shall at last present
 Thy vengeful image in the midnight tent: 90
 Thy hand unseen the secret death shall bear,
 Blunt the weak sword, and break th' oppressive spear.

Where'er we turn, by Fancy charm'd, we find
 Some sweet illusion of the cheated mind;
 Oft, wild of wing, she calls the soul to rove 95
 With humbler Nature in the rural grove,
 Where swains contented own the quiet scene,
 And twilight fairies tread the circled green:
 Dress'd by her hand the woods and vallies smile,
 And Spring diffusive decks th' enchanted isle. 100

O, more than all in powerful genius blest,
 Come take thine empire o'er a willing breast!
 Whate'er the wounds this youthful heart shall feel,
 Thy songs support me, and thy morals heal!
 There every thought the poet's warmth may raise, 105
 There native music dwells in all the lays.

O, might some verse with happiest skill persuade
 Expressive picture to adopt thine aid!
 What wondrous draughts might rise from every page!
 What other Raphaels charm a distant age! 110

Methinks e'en now I view some free design,
 Where breathing Nature lives in every line;
 Chaste and subdu'd the modest lights decay,
 Steal into shades and mildly melt away.
 —And see! where Anthony†, in tears approv'd, 115
 Guards the pale relics of the chief he lov'd:
 O'er the cold corse the warrior seems to bend,
 Deep sunk in grief, and mourns his murder'd friend!
 Still as they press he calls on all around,
 Lifts the torn robe, and points the bleeding wound!

But who is he whose brows exalted bear 120
 A wrath impatient, and a fiercer air‡?

* Tempus erit Turno, magno cum optaverit emptum
 Intactum palanta, &c.

† See the Tragedy of Julius Cæsar.

‡ Coriolanus. See Mr. Spencer's Dialogue on the Odyssey.

Awake to all that injur'd worth can feel,
 On his own Rome he turns th' avenging steel.
 Yet shall not War's insatiate fury fall
 (So heaven ordains it) on the destin'd wall.
 See the fond mother 'midst the plaintive train
 Hang on his knees, and prostrate on the plain!
 Touch'd to the soul, in vain he strives to hide
 The son's affection in the Roman's pride:
 O'er all the man conflicting passions rise,
 Rage grasps the sword, while Pity melts the eyes!
 Thus, gen'rous critic! as thy bard inspires
 The sister Arts shall nurse their drooping fires;
 Each from his scenes her stores alternate bring,
 Blend the fair tints, or wake the vocal string:
 Those Sibyl-leaves, the sport of every wind,
 (For poets ever were a careless kind)
 By thee dispos'd no farther toil demand,
 But, just to Nature, own thy forming hand.
 So spread o'er Greece th' harmonious whole unknown,
 E'en Homer's numbers charm'd by parts alone:
 Their own Ulysses scarce had wander'd more,
 By winds and waters cast on every shore;
 When, rais'd by Fate, some former Hammer join'd
 Each beauteous image of the boundless mind,
 And bade, like thee, his Athens ever claim
 A fond alliance with the poet's name.

DIRGE IN CYMBELINE,*

Sung by Guiderius and Arviragus over Fidele,

Supposed to be dead.

TO fair Fidele's grassy tomb
 Soft maids and village hinds shall bring
 Each opening sweet of earliest bloom,
 And rifle all the breathing spring.

* Mr. Collins had skill to complain: of that mournful melody and those tender images which are the distinguished excellencies of such pieces as bewail departed friendship or beauty, he was an almost unequalled master. He knew perfectly to exhibit such circumstances, peculiar to the objects, as awaken the influences of pity; and while, from his own great sensibility, he felt what he wrote, he naturally addressed himself to the feelings of others.

No wailing ghost shall dare appear,
To vex with shrieks this quiet grove,
But shepherd-lads assemble here,
And melting virgins own their love.

No wither'd witch shall here be seen,
No goblins lead their nightly crew ;
The female fays shall haunt the green,
And dress thy grave with pearly dew.

The red-breast oft' at evening hours
Shall kindly lend his little aid,
With hoary moss and gather'd flow'rs
To deck the ground where thou art laid.

When howling winds and beating rain
In tempests shake the sylvan cell,
Or 'midst the chase, on every plain
The tender thought on thee shall dwell :

Each lonely scene shall thee restore,
For thee the tear be duly shed ;
Belov'd till life can charm no more,
And mourn'd till Pity's self be dead.

VERSES

Written on a Paper which contained a piece of Bride-cake.

YE curious hands that, hid from vulgar eyes,
By search profane shall find this hallow'd cake,
With virtue's awe forbear the sacred prize,
Nor dare a theft for love and pity's sake !

This precious relic, form'd by magic pow'r,
Beneath the shepherd's haunted pillow laid,
Was meant by Love to charm the silent hour,
The secret present of a matchless maid.

To read such lines as the following, all beautiful and tender as they are, without corresponding emotions of pity, is surely impossible :

The tender thought on thee shall dwell ;
Each lonely scene shall thee restore,
For thee the tear be duly shed ;
Belov'd till life can charm no more,
And mourn'd till Pity's self be dead.

The Cyprian queen at Hymen's fond request
 Each nice ingredient chose with happiest art ;
 Fears, sighs, and wishes of th' enamour'd breast,
 And pains that please, are mix'd in every part. 12

With rosy hand the spicy fruit she brought
 From Paphian hills and fair Cythera's isle,
 And temper'd sweet with these the melting thought,
 The kiss ambrosial, and the yielding smile. 16

Ambiguous looks, that scorn and yet relent,
 Denials mild, and firm unalter'd truth,
 Reluctant pride, and am'rous faint consent,
 And meeting ardours, and exulting youth. 20

Sleep, wayward God ! hath sworn while these remain
 With flatt'ring dreams to dry his nightly tear,
 And cheerful Hope, so oft invok'd in vain,
 With Fairy songs shall sooth his pensive ear. 24

If, bound by vows to Friendship's gentle side,
 And, fond of soul, thou hop'st an equal grace ;
 If youth or maid thy joys and griefs divide,
 O, much intreated, leave this fatal place ! 28

Sweet Peace, who long hath shun'd my plaintive day,
 Consents at length to bring me short delight ;
 Thy careless steps may scare her doves away,
 And Grief with raven note usurp the night. 32

ORIENTAL ECLOGUES.

ECLOGUE I.

SELIM;

OR THE SHEPHERD'S MORAL.

Scene, a Valley near Bagdad. Time, the Morning.

YE Persian maids, attend your poet's lays,
And hear how shepherds pass their golden days.
Not all are blest whom Fortune's hand sustains
With wealth in courts, nor all that haunt the plains:
Well may your hearts believe the truths I tell! 5
'Tis virtue makes the bliss, where'er we dwell.

Thus Selim sung, by sacred truth inspir'd;
Nor praise, but such as truth bestow'd, desir'd;
Wise in himself, his meaning songs convey'd
Informing morals to the shepherd maid; 10
Or taught the swains that surest bliss to find,
What groves nor streams bestow, a virtuous mind.

When sweet and blushing, like a virgin bride,
The radiant morn resum'd her orient pride,
When wanton gales along the vallies play, 15
Breathe on each flower, and bear their sweets away:
By Tigris' wandering waves he sat, and sung
This useful lesson for the fair and young.

Ye Persian dames, he said, to you belong,
Well may they please, the morals of my song: 20
No fairer maids, I trust, than you are found,
Grac'd with soft arts, the peopled world around;
The morn that lights you, to your loves supplies
Each gentler ray delicious to your eyes:
For you those flowers her fragrant hands bestow, 25
And yours the love that kings delight to know.
Yet think not these, all beauteous as they are,
The best kind blessings heaven can grant the fair!
Who trust alone in beauty's feeble ray,
Boast but the worth Bassora's pearls display; 30
Drawn from the deep we own their surface bright,
But, dark within, they drink no lustrous light:

Such are the maids and such the charms they boast,
By sense unaided, or to virtue lost.

Self-flattering sex! your hearts believe in vain 35

That love shall blind, when once he fires the swain;

Or hope a lover by your faults to win,

As spots on ermin beautify the skin:

Who seeks secure to rule, be first her care

Each softer virtue that adorns the fair; 40

Each tender passion man delights to find,

The lov'd perfections of a female mind!

Blest were the days, when Wisdom held her reign,

And shepherds sought her on the silent plain;

With Truth she wedded in the secret grove, 45

Immortal Truth, and daughters bless'd their love.

O haste, fair maids! ye Virtues come away,

Sweet Peace and Plenty lead you on your way!

The balmy shrub for you shall love our shore,

By Ind excell'd, or Araby, no more. 50

Lost to our fields, for so the Fates ordain,

The dear deserters shall return again.

Come thou, whose thoughts as limpid springs are clear,

To lead the train, sweet Modesty appear:

Here make thy court amidst our rural scene, 55

And shepherd-girls shall own thee for their queen.

With thee be Chastity, of all afraid,

Distrusting all, a wise suspicious maid;

But man the most—not more the mountain doe

Holds the swift falcon for her deadly foe. 60

Cold is her breast, like flowers that drink the dew,

A silken veil conceals her from the view.

No wild desires amidst thy train be known,

But Faith, whose heart is fix'd on one alone:

Desponding Meekness with her downcast eyes, 65

And friendly Pity, full of tender sighs;

And Love the last: by these your hearts approve,

These are the virtues that must lead to love.

Thus sung the swain; and ancient legends say,

The maids of Bagdat verified the lay: 70

Dear to the plains, the Virtues came along,

The shepherds lov'd, and Selim bless'd his song. 72

ECLOGUE II.

HASSAN;

OR, THE CAMEL-DRIVER.

Scene, The desert. Time, Mid-day.

IN filent horror, o'er the boundless waste,
 The driver Hassan with his camels past;
 One cruise of water on his back he bore,
 And his light scrip contain'd a scanty store;
 A fan of painted feathers in his hand, 5
 To guard his shaded face from scorching sand.
 The sultry sun had gain'd the middle sky,
 And not a tree and not an herb was nigh;
 The beasts with pain their dusty way pursue,
 Shrill roar'd the winds, and dreary was the view! 10
 With desp'rate sorrow wild, th' affrighted man
 Thrice sigh'd, thrice struck his breast, and thus began;
 "Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 "When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way!"
 Ah! little thought I of the blasting wind, 15
 The thirst or pinching hunger that I find!
 Bethink thee, Hassan! where shall thirst assuage,
 When fails this cruise, his unrelenting rage?
 Soon shall this scrip its precious load resign,
 Then what but tears and hunger shall be thine?
 Ye mute companions of my toils, that bear 20
 In all my griefs a more than equal share!
 Here, where no springs in murmurs break away,
 Or moss-crown'd fountains mitigate the day,
 In vain ye hope the green delight to know
 Which plains more blest'd or verdant vales bestow;
 Here rocks alone and tasteless sands are found,
 And faint and sickly winds for ever howl around.
 "Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 "When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way!" 30
 Curs'd be the gold and silver which persuade
 Weak men to follow far fatiguing trade!
 The lily peace outshines the silver store,
 And life is dearer than the golden ore;

Yet money tempts us o'er the desert brown 35
 To ev'ry distant mart and wealthy town :
 Full oft we tempt the land, and oft the sea ;
 And are we only yet repaid by thee ?
 Ah ! why was ruin so attractive made,
 Or why fond man so easily betray'd ? 40
 Why heed we not, while mad we haste along,
 The gentle voice of Peace, or Pleasure's song ?
 Or wherefore think the flow'ry mountain's side,
 The fountain's murmurs, and the valley's pride ;
 Why think we these less pleasing to behold 45
 Than dreary deserts, if they lead to gold ?
 " Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 " When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way !"
 O cease, my fears !—All frantic as I go,
 When thought creates unnumber'd scenes of woe,
 What if the lion in his rage I meet !— 51
 Oft in the dust I view his printed feet ;
 And fearful oft, when Day's declining light
 Yields her pale empire to the mourner Night,
 By hunger rous'd he scours the groaning plain, 55
 Gaunt wolves and sullen tigers in his train ;
 Before them Death with shrieks directs their way,
 Fills the wild yell, and leads them to their prey.
 " Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 " When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way !"
 At that dead hour the silent asp shall creep, 61
 If aught of rest I find, upon my sleep ;
 Or some swollen serpent twist his scales around,
 And wake to anguish with a burning wound.
 Thrice happy they, the wise contented poor, 65
 From lust of wealth and dread of death secure !
 They tempt no deserts, and no griefs they find ;
 Peace rules the day where reason rules the mind.
 " Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 " When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way !" 70
 O hapless Youth ! for she thy love hath won,
 The tender Zara ! will be most undone.
 Big swell'd my heart, and own'd the powerful maid,
 When fast she dropp'd her tears, as thus she said :

“ Farewel the youth whom sighs could not detain, 75
 “ Whom Zara’s breaking heart implor’d in vain !
 “ Yet as thou go’st, may every blast arise
 “ Weak and unfelt as these rejected sighs ;
 “ Safe o’er the wild no perils may’st thou see,
 “ No griefs endure, nor weep, false Youth ! like me.
 “ O ! let me safely to the fair return, 81
 “ Say with a kiss, she must not, shall not mourn ;
 “ O ! let me teach my heart to lose its fears,
 “ Recall’d by Wisdom’s voice and Zara’s tears.”
 He said, and call’d on Heav’n to bless the day
 When back to Schiraz’ walls he bent his way. 86

ECLOGUE III.

ABRA ;

OR, THE GEORGIAN SULTANA.

Scene, A Forest. Time, The Evening.

IN Georgia’s land, where Teflis’ towers are seen
 In distant view along the level green,
 While ev’ning dew enrich the glitt’ring glade,
 And the tall forests cast a longer shade,
 What time ’tis sweet o’er fields of rice to stray, 5
 Or scent the breathing maize at setting day,
 Amidst the maids of Zagen’s peaceful grove
 Emyra sung the pleasing cares of love.

Of Abra first began the tender strain,
 Who led her youth with flocks upon the plain : 10
 At morn she came those willing flocks to lead
 Where lilies rear them in th’ watry mead ;
 From early dawn the live-long hours she told,
 Till late at silent eve she penn’d the fold.
 Deep in the grove, beneath the secret shade, 15
 A various wreath of od’rous flowers she made ;
 Gay-motley’d pinks and sweet jonquils she chose,*
 The violet blue, that on the moss-bank grows ;
 All-sweet to sense the flaunting rose was there ;
 The finish’d chaplet well adorn’d her hair. 20

* That these flowers are found in very great abundance in some of the provinces of Persia, see the Modern History of Mr. Salmon.

Great Abbas chanc'd that fatal morn to stray,
 By love conducted from the chase away;
 Among the vocal vales he heard her song,
 And sought the vales and echoing groves among:
 At length he found and woo'd the rural maid;
 She knew the monarch, and with fear obey'd.
 "Be every youth like royal Abbas mov'd,
 "And every Georgian maid like Abra lov'd!"

The royal lover bore her from the plain,
 Yet still her crook and bleating flock remain:
 Oft as she went she backward turn'd her view,
 And bade that crook and bleating flock adieu.
 Fair happy Maid! to other scenes remove,
 To richer scenes of golden pow'r and love!
 Go leave the simple pipe and shepherd's strain;
 With love delight thee, and with Abbas reign.

"Be every youth like royal Abbas mov'd,
 "And every Georgian maid like Abra lov'd!"
 Yet midst the blaze of courts she fix'd her love
 On the cool fountain, or the shady grove;
 Still with the shepherd's innocence her mind
 To the sweet vale, and flow'ry mead inclin'd;
 And oft as spring renew'd the plains with flow'rs,
 Breath'd his soft gales, and led the fragrant hours,
 With sure return she sought the sylvan scene,
 The breezy mountains, and the forests green.
 Her maids around her mov'd, a duteous band!
 Each bore a crook all rural in her hand:
 Some simple lay of flocks and herds they sung;
 With joy the mountain and the forest rung.

"Be every youth like royal Abbas mov'd,
 "And every Georgian maid like Abra lov'd!"
 And oft the royal lover left the care.

And thorns of state, attendant on the fair;
 Oft to the shades and low-roof'd cots retir'd,
 Or sought the vale where first his heart was fir'd.
 A russet mantle, like a swain, he wore,
 And thought of crowns, and busy courts no more.
 "Be every youth like royal Abbas mov'd,
 "And every Georgian maid like Abra lov'd!"

Blest was the life that royal Abbas led ;
 Sweet was his love, and innocent his bed.
 What if in wealth the noble maid excel ?
 The simple shepherd-girl can love as well.
 Let those who rule on Persia's jewell'd throne
 Be fam'd for love, and gentlest love alone ;
 Or wreath, like Abbas, full of fair renown,
 The lover's myrtle with the warrior's crown.
 O happy days ! the maids around her say ;
 O haste, profuse of blessings, haste away !
 " Be every youth like royal Abbas mov'd,
 " And every Georgian maid like Abra lov'd !"

ECLOGUE IV.

AGIB AND SECANDER ;

OR, THE FUGITIVES.

Scene, A Mountain in Circassia. Time, Midnight.

IN fair Circassia, where, to love inclin'd,
 Each swain was blest, for every maid was kind ;
 At that still hour when awful midnight reigns,
 And none but wretches haunt the twilight plains ;
 What time the moon had hung her lamp on high,
 And past in radiance thro' the cloudless sky,
 Sad o'er the dews two brother shepherds fled,
 Where wild'ring Fear and desp'rate Sorrow led :
 Fast as they prest their flight behind them lay
 Wild ravag'd plains, and valleys stole away.
 Along the mountain's bending sides they ran,
 Till, faint and weak, Secander thus began :

Secan. O stay thee, Agib ! for my feet deny,
 No longer friendly to my life, to fly.
 Friend of my heart ! O turn thee and survey,
 Trace our sad flight through all its length of way !
 And first review that long-extended plain,
 And yon wide groves, already past with pain ;
 Yon ragged cliff, whose dang'rous path we try'd,
 And last this lofty mountain's weary side.

Agib. Weak as thou art, yet, hapless ! must thou know
 The toils of flight, or some severer woe.

Still as I haste the Tartar shouts behind,
 And shrieks and sorrows load the sadd'ning wind :
 In rage of heart, with ruin in his hand, 25
 He blasts our harvests and deforms our land.
 Yon citron grove, whence first in fear we came,
 Droops its fair honours to the conquering flame :
 Far fly the swains, like us, in deep despair,
 And leave to ruffian bands their fleecy care. 30

Secan. Unhappy land ! whole blessings tempt the sword ;
 In vain, unheard, thou call'st thy Persian Lord !
 In vain thou court'st him, helpless, to thine aid,
 To shield the shepherd and protect the maid !
 Far off, in thoughtless indolence resign'd, 35
 Soft dreams of love and pleasure sooth his mind ;
 'Midst fair sultanas lost in idle joy,
 No wars alarm him, and no fears annoy.

Agib. Yet these green hills in summer's sultry heat
 Have lent the monarch oft a cool retreat. 40
 Sweet to the sight is Zabran's flow'ry plain,
 And once by maids and shepherds lov'd in vain !
 No more the virgins shall delight to rove
 By Sargis' banks or Irwan's shady grove ;
 On Tarkie's mountain catch the cooling gale, 45
 Or breathe the sweets of Aly's flow'ry vale :
 Fair scenes ! but, ah ! no more with peace possess'd,
 With ease alluring, and with plenty blest'd :
 No more the shepherds' whitening tents appear,
 Nor the kind products of a bounteous year ; 50
 No more the date, with snowy blossoms crown'd,
 But ruin spreads her baleful fires around.

Secan. In vain Circassia boasts her spicy groves,
 For ever fam'd for pure and happy loves ;
 In vain she boasts her fairest of the fair, 55
 Their eyes' blue languish, and their golden hair :
 Those eyes in tears their fruitless grief must send ;
 Those hairs the Tartar's cruel hands shall rend. [far

Agib. Ye Georgian Swains ! that piteous learn from Circassia's ruin and the waste of war, 60
 Some weightier arms than crooks and staves prepare
 To shield your harvests and defend your fair :

The Turk and Tartar like designs pursue,
 Fix'd to destroy, and stedfast to undo.
 Wild as his land, in native deserts bred, 65
 By lust incited, or by malice led,
 The villain Arab! as he prowls for prey,
 Oft marks with blood and wasting flames the way;
 Yet none so cruel as the Tartar foe,
 To death inur'd, and nurs'd in scenes of woe. 70
 He said; when loud along the vale was heard
 A shriller shriek, and nearer fires appear'd;
 Th' affrighted shepherds thro' the dews of night
 Wide o'er the moon-light hills renew'd their flight. 74

ODES

DESCRIPTIVE AND ALLEGORICAL.

ODE I. TO PITY.

O THOU! the friend of man, assign'd
 With balmy hands his wounds to bind,
 And charm his frantic woe,
 When first Distress, with dagger keen,
 Broke forth to waste his destin'd scene,
 His wild unsated foe!

By Pella's bard, a magic name!
 By all the griefs his thought could frame,
 Receive my humble rite!
 Long, Pity! let the nations view
 Thy sky-worn robes of tend'rest blue,
 And eyes of dewy light. 12

But wherefore need I wander wide
 To old Ilissus' distant side?
 Deserted stream and mute!
 Wild Arun* too has heard thy strains,
 And Echo 'midst my native plains
 Been sooth'd by Pity's lute: 18

* A river in Susea.

There first the wren thy myrtles shed
 On gentlest Otway's infant head ;
 To him thy cell was shown ;
 And while he sung the female heart,
 With youth's soft notes unspoil'd by art,
 Thy turtles mix'd their own.

24

Come, Pity ! come ; by Fancy's aid
 E'en now my thoughts, relenting maid !
 Thy temples pride design :
 Its southern site, its truth complete,
 Shall raise a wild enthusiast heat
 In all who view the shrine.

30

There Picture's toil shall well relate
 How Chance or hard involving Fate
 O'er mortal bliss prevail :
 The buskin'd Muse shall near her stand,
 And, sighing, prompt her tender hand
 With each disastrous tale.

36

There let me oft, retir'd by day,
 In dreams of passion melt away,
 Allow'd with thee to dwell ;
 There waste the mournful lamp of night,
 Till, Virgin ! thou again delight
 To hear a British shell.

42

ODE II. TO FEAR.

THOU ! to whom the world unknown
 With all its shadowy shapes is shown ;
 Who seest appall'd th' unreal scene,
 While Fancy lifts the veil between ;
 Ah, Fear ! ah, frantic Fear !
 I see, I see thee near !
 I know thy hurry'd step, thy haggard eye !
 Like thee I start, like thee disorder'd fly,
 For lo ! what monsters in thy train appear !
 Danger, whose limbs of giant mould
 What mortal eye can fix'd behold ?

Who stalks his round, an hideous form!
 Howling amidst the midnight storm,
 Or throws him on the ridgy steep
 Of some loose hanging rock to sleep; 15
 And with him thousand phantoms join'd,
 Who prompt to deeds accurs'd the mind;
 And those, the fiends who near ally'd,
 O'er Nature's wounds and wrecks preside;
 While Vengeance in the lurid air 20
 Lifts her red arm, expos'd and bare;
 On whom that rav'ning brood of Fate
 Who lap the blood of Sorrow wait.
 Who, Fear! this ghastly train can see
 And look not madly wild like thee? 25

EPODE.

In earliest Greece to thee with partial choice
 The grief-full Muse address'd her infant tongue;
 The maids and matrons on her awful voice,
 Silent and pale, in wild amazement hung.
 Yet he, the bard* who first invok'd thy name, 30
 Disdain'd in Marathon its power to feel;
 For not alone he nurs'd the poet's flame,
 But reach'd from Virtue's hand the patriot's steel.
 But who is he whom later garlands grace,
 Who, left a while o'er Hybla's dew to rove, 35
 With trembling eyes thy dreary steps to trace,
 Where thou and Furies shar'd the baleful grove?
 Wrapp'd in thy cloudy veil th' incestuous queen†
 Sigh'd the sad call her son and husband heard,
 When once alone it broke the silent scene, 40
 And he the wretch of Thebes no more appear'd.
 O Fear! I know thee by my throbbing heart;
 Thy with'ring pow'r inspir'd each mournful line:
 Tho' gentle Pity claim her mingled part,
 Yet all the thunders of the scene are thine. 45

* Æschylus.

† Jocasta.

ANTISTROPHE.

Thou who such weary lengths hast past,
 Where wilt thou rest, mad Nymph! at last?
 Say, wilt thou shroud in haunted cell,
 Where gloomy Rape and Murder dwell?
 Or in some hollow'd feat, 50
 'Gainst which the big waves beat,
 Hear drowning seamen's cries, in tempests brought?
 Dark Power! with shudd'ring meek submitted thought,
 Be mine to read the visions old
 Which thy awak'ning bards have told. 55
 And lest thou meet my blasted view,
 Hold each strange tale devoutly true.
 Ne'er be I found by thee o'er-aw'd
 In that thrice-hallow'd eve abroad
 When ghosts, as cottage-maids believe, 60
 Their pebbled beds permitted leave,
 And goblins haunt from fire, or fen,
 Or mine, or flood, the walks of men!
 O Thou! whose spirit most possessest
 The sacred seat of Shakespeare's breast; 65
 By all that from thy prophet broke,
 In thy divine emotions spoke,
 Hither again thy fury deal;
 Teach me but once like him to feel;
 His cypress wreath my meed decree,
 And I, O Fear! will dwell with thee. 71

ODE III. TO SIMPLICITY.

O THOU, by Nature taught
 To breathe her genuine thought
 In numbers warmly pure and sweetly strong;
 Who first on mountains wild,
 In Fancy, loveliest child,
 Thy babe, and Pleasure's, nurs'd the powers of song! 6
 Thou! who with hermit heart
 Disdain'd the wealth of art,
 And gauds, and pageant weeds, and trailing pall,

But com'ſt a decent maid,
In Attic robe array'd,
O chaste unboastful Nymph! to thee I call. 12

By all the honey'd ſtore
On Hybla's thymy ſhore;
By all her blooms and mingled murmurs dear;
By her whoſe love-lorn woe
In ev'ning muſings flow
Sooth'd ſweetly ſad Electra's poet's ear: 18

By old Cephifus deep,
Who ſpreads his wavy ſweep
In warbled wand'rings round thy green retreat,
On whoſe enamell'd ſide,
When holy Freedom dy'd,
No equal haunt allur'd thy future feet: 24

O ſiſter meek of Truth!
To my admiring youth
Thy ſober aid and native charms infuſe.
The flow'rs that ſweeteſt breathe,
Tho' Beauty cull'd the wreath,
Still aſk thy hand to range their order'd hues. 30

While Rome could none eſteem
But Virtue's patriot theme,
You lov'd her hills, and led her laureat band;
But ſtay'd to ſing alone
To one diſtinguiſh'd throne,
And turn'd thy face, and fled her alter'd land. 36

No more in hall or bow'r
The paſſions own thy pow'r;
Love, only love, her forceleſs numbers mean;
For thou haſt left her ſhrine,
Nor olive more nor vine
Shall gain thy feet to bleſs the ſervile ſcene. 42

Tho' taſte, tho' genius, bleſs
To ſome divine exceſs,
Faint's the cold work till thou inſpire the whole:

What each, what all, supply
 May court, may charm, our eye;
 Thou, only thou, canst raise the meeting soul!

48

Of these let others ask
 To aid some mighty task;
 I only seek to find thy temp'rate vale,
 Where oft my reed might sound
 To maids and shepherds round,
 And all thy sons, O Nature! learn my tale.

54

ON THE POETICAL CHARACTER.

AS once, if not with light regard,
 I read aright that gifted bard,
 (Him whose school above the rest
 His loveliest Elfin queen has blest)
 One, only one, unrivall'd fair*,
 Might hope the magic girdle wear,
 At solemn tourney hung on high,
 The wish of each love-darting eye:
 Lo! to each other nymph in turn apply'd,
 As if in air unseen, some hov'ring hand,
 Some chaste and angel-friend to virgin-fame,
 With whisper'd spell had burst the starting band,
 It left unblest'd her loath'd dishonour'd side:
 Happier, hopeless fair! if never
 Her baffled hand with vain endeavour
 Had touch'd that fatal zone, to her deny'd.
 Young Fancy thus, to me divinest name!
 To whom, prepar'd and bath'd in heaven,
 The cest of amplest power is given,
 To few the godlike gift assigns
 To gird their blest prophetic loins,
 And gaze her vision wild, and feel unmix'd her flame.
 The band, as fairy legends say,
 Was wove on that creating day
 When he who call'd with thought to birth
 Yon tented sky this laughing earth,

* Florizel. See Spenser, Leg. 4.

And drest with springs and forests tall,
 And pour'd the main engirthing all,
 Long by the lov'd enthusiast woo'd,
 Himself in some diviner mood 30
 Retiring, sat with her alone,
 And plac'd her on his sapphire throne,
 The whiles the vaulted shrine around
 Seraphic wires were heard to sound,
 Now sublimest triumph swelling, 35
 Now on love and mercy dwelling;
 And she from out the veiling cloud
 Breath'd her magic notes aloud;
 And thou, thou rich-hair'd youth of Morn!
 And all thy subject life was born. 40
 The dang'rous Passions kept aloof
 Far from the fainted growing woof;
 But near it sat ecstatic Wonder,
 List'ning the deep applauding thunder;
 And Truth, in sunny vest array'd, 45
 By whose the Tarsel's eyes were made;
 All the shadowy tribes of Mind,
 In braided dance their murmurs join'd,
 And all the bright uncounted pow'rs
 Who feed on heaven's ambrosial flow'rs. 50
 Where is the bard whose soul can now
 Its high presuming hopes avow?
 Where he who thinks with rapture blind,
 This hallow'd work for him design'd?
 High on some cliff, to heaven up-pil'd, 55
 Of rude access, of prospect wild,
 Where tangled round the jealous steep
 Strange shades o'erbrow the vallies deep,
 And holy Genii guard the rock,
 Its glooms embrown, its springs unlock, 60
 While on its rich ambitious head
 An Eden like his own lies spread.
 I view that oak the fancy'd glades among,
 By which a Milton lay, his ev'ning ear,
 From many a cloud that dropp'd ethereal dew, 65
 Nigh spher'd in heav'n, its native strains could hear,

On which that ancient trump he reach'd was hung;
 Thither oft his glory greeting,
 From Waller's myrtle shades retreating,
 With many a vow from Hope's aspiring tongue 70
 My trembling feet his guiding steps pursue;
 In vain—Such bliss to one alone
 Of all the sons of Soul was known,
 And Heaven and Fancy, kindred pow'rs,
 Have now o'erturn'd th' inspiring bow'rs, 75
 Or curtain'd close such scene from ev'ry future view.

ODE V. TO A LADY,

ON THE DEATH OF COLONEL C. ROSS,

In the Action of Fontenoy.

Written May 1745.

WHILE, lost to all his former mirth,
 Britannia's Genius bends to earth,
 And mourns the fatal day;
 While, stain'd with blood, he strives to tear
 Unseemly from his sea-green hair
 The wreaths of cheerful May; 6

The thoughts which musing Pity pays,
 And fond Remembrance loves to raise,
 Your faithful hours attend:
 Still Fancy to herself unkind,
 Awakes to grief the soften'd mind,
 And points the bleeding friend. 12

By rapid Scheld's descending wave
 His country's vows shall bless the grave
 Where'er the youth is laid:
 That sacred spot the village hind
 With ev'ry sweetest turf shall bind,
 And Peace protect the shade. 18

O'er him, whose doom thy Virtues grieve,
 Aerial forms shall sit at eve,
 And bend the pensive head;
 And fall'n to save his injur'd land,
 Imperial Honour's awful hand
 Shall point his lonely bed. 24

The warlike dead of ev'ry age,
Who fill the fair recording page,
Shall leave their fainted rest;
And, half-reclining on his spear,
Each wond'ring chief by turns appear
To hail the blooming guest.

Old Edward's sons, unknown to yield,
Shall croud from Cressy's laurell'd field,
And gaze with fix'd delight:
Again for Britain's wrongs they feel,
Again they snatch the gleamy steel,
And wish th' avenging fight.

But, lo! where sunk in deep despair,
Her garments torn, her bosom bare,
Impatient Freedom lies!
Her matted tresses madly spread,
To ev'ry sod which wraps the dead
She turns her joyless eyes.

42

Ne'er shall she leave that lowly ground
Till notes of triumph bursting round
Proclaim her reign restor'd;
Till William seek the sad retreat,
And, bleeding at her sacred feet,
Present the stated sword.

48

If, weak to sooth so soft an heart,
These pictur'd glories nought impart
To dry thy constant tear;
If yet, in Sorrow's distant eye,
Expos'd and pale thou seest him lie,
Wild War insulting near;

54

Where'er from time thou court'st relief
The muse shall still with social grief
Her gentlest promise keep:
E'en humble Harting's cottag'd vale
Shall learn the sad repeated tale,
And bid her shepherds weep.

ODE VI.

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1746.

HOW sleep the brave, who sink to rest
 By all their country's wishes blest?
 When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
 Returns to deck their hallow'd mould,
 She there shall dress a sweeter sod
 Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By Fairy hands their knell is rung;
 By forms unseen their dirge is sung:
 There Honour comes, a pilgrim grey,
 To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
 And Freedom shall a while repair
 To dwell a weeping hermit there.

ODE VII. TO MERCY.

STROPHE.

O THOU! who sitt'st a smiling bride
 By Valour's arm'd and awful side,
 Gentlest of sky-born forms, and best ador'd!
 Who oft with songs divine to hear
 Winn'st from his fatal grasp the spear,
 And hid'st in wreaths of flow'rs his bloodless sword;
 Thou who amidst the deathful field,
 By godlike chiefs alone beheld,
 Oft with thy bosom bare art found,
 Pleading for him the youth who sinks to ground:
 See, Mercy! see! with pure and loaded hands
 Before thy shrine my country's Genius stands, [wound.
 And decks thy altar still, tho' pierc'd with many a

ANTISTROPHE.

When he whom e'en our joys provoke,
 The fiend of Nature, join'd his yoke,
 And rush'd in wrath to make our isle his prey,
 Thy form from out thy sweet abode
 O'ertook him on his blasted road,
 And stopp'd his wheels, and look'd his rage away.

I see recoil his sable steeds,
 That bore him swift to savage deeds;
 Thy tender melting eyes they own.
 O Maid! for all thy love to Britain shown,
 Where Justice bars her iron tow'r,
 To thee we build a roseate bow'r, [narch's throne!
 Thou, thou shalt rule our queen, and share our mo-

ODE VIII. TO LIBERTY.

STROPHE

WHO shall awake the Spartan fire,
 And call in solemn sounds to life
 The youths whose locks divinely spreading,
 Like vernal Hyacinths in fullen hue,
 At once the breath of fear and virtue shedding, 5
 Applauding Freedom lov'd of old to view?
 What new Alcæus, fancy-blest,
 Shall sing the sword, in myrtles drest,
 At Wisdom's shrine a while its flame concealing,
 (What place so fit to seal a deed renown'd?) 10
 Till she her brightest lightnings round revealing,
 It leap'd in glory forth, and dealt her prompted wound!
 O Goddess! in that feeling hour,
 When most its sounds would court thy ears,
 Let not my shell's misguided pow'r 15
 E'er draw thy sad, thy mindful, tears.
 No, Freedom! no; I will not tell
 How Rome, before thy weeping face,
 With heaviest sound a giant-statue fell,
 Push'd by a wild and artless race 20
 From off its wide ambitious base,
 When Time his northern sons of spoil awoke,
 And all the blended work of strength and grace,
 With many a rude repeated stroke, [broke.
 And many a barb'rous yell, to thousand fragments

EPISODE II.

Yet e'en where'er the least appear'd 26
 Th' admiring world thy hand rever'd;

Still 'midst the scatter'd states around
 Some remnants of her strength were found:
 They saw by what escap'd the storm, 30
 How wond'rous rose her perfect form;
 How in the great the labour'd whole
 Each mighty master pour'd his soul:
 For sunny Florence, seat of Art,
 Beneath her vines preserv'd a part, 35
 Till they whom Science lov'd to name
 (O who could fear it!) quench'd her flame.
 And lo! an humbler relic laid
 In jealous Pisa's olive shade,
 See small Marino joins the theme, 40
 Tho' least, not last, in thy esteem.
 Strike! louder strike, th' ennobling strings
 To those whose merchant-sons were kings;
 To him who, deck'd with pearly pride,
 In Adria weds his green-hair'd bride. 45
 Hail! port of glory, wealth, and pleasure!
 Ne'er let me change this Lydian measure,
 Nor e'er her former pride relate
 To sad Liguria's bleeding state.
 Ah! no; more pleas'd thy haunts I seek 50
 On wild Helvetia's mountains bleak,
 (Where when the favour'd of thy choice,
 The daring archer heard thy voice,
 Forth from his eyrie, rous'd in dread,
 The rav'ning Eagle northward fled) 55
 Or dwell in willow'd meads more near,
 With those to whom thy Stork is dear*,
 Those whom the rod of Alva bruis'd,
 Whose crown a British queen refus'd.
 The magic works, thou feel'st the strains, 60
 One holier name alone remains;
 The perfect spell shall then avail,
 Hail, Nymph! ador'd by Britain, hail!

* The Dutch, amongst whom there are very severe penalties for those who are convicted of killing this bird. They are kept tame in almost all their towns, and particularly at the Hague, of the arms of which they make a part. The common people of Holland are said to entertain a superstitious sentiment, that if the whole species of them should become extinct, they should lose their liberties.

ANTISTROPHE.

Beyond the measure vast of thought
 The works the wizard Time has wrought ! 65
 The Gaul, 'tis held of antique story,
 Saw Britain link'd to his now adverse strand* ;
 No sea between, no cliff sublime and hoary,
 He pass'd with unwet feet thro' all our land.
 To the blown Baltic then, they say, 70
 The wild waves found another way,
 Where Orcas howls, his wolfish mountains rounding,
 Till all the banded west at once 'gan rise,
 A wide wild storm e'en Nature's self confounding,
 With'ring her giant sons with strange uncouth surprise.
 This pillar'd earth, so firm and wide, 76
 By winds and inward labours torn,
 In thunders dread was push'd aside,
 And down the should'ring billows borne.
 And see ! like gems her laughing train, 80
 The little isles on ev'ry side,
 Mona †, once hid from those who search the main,
 Where thousand elfin shapes abide,
 And wight who checks the west'ring tide,
 For the consenting Heav'n has each bestow'd, 85
 A fair attendant on her sov'reign pride ;
 To thee this blest divorce she ow'd,
 For thou hast made her vales thy lov'd thy last abode !

SECOND EPODE.

Then too, 'tis said, an hoary pile
 Midst the green naval of our isle, 90

* This tradition is mentioned by several of our old historians. Some naturalists too have endeavoured to support the probability of the fact by arguments drawn from the correspondent disposition of the two opposite coasts. I do not remember that any poetical use has been hitherto made of it.

† There is a tradition in the Isle of Man, that a mermaid becoming enamoured of a young man of extraordinary beauty, took an opportunity of meeting him one day as he walked on the shore, and opened her passion to him, but was received with a coldness, occasioned by his horror and surprise at her appearance. This however was so misconstrued by the sea-lady, that in revenge for this treatment of her she punished the whole island by covering it with a mist ; so that all who attempted to carry on a commerce with it either never arrived at it, but wandered up and down the sea, or were on a sudden wrecked upon its cliffs.

Thy shrine in some religious wood,
 O sole-enforcing Goddess ! stood ;
 There oft' the painted native's feet
 Were wont thy form celestial meet ;
 Tho' now with hopeless toil we trace 95
 Time's backward rolls to find its place ;
 Whether the fiery-tressed Dane
 Or Roman's self o'erturn'd the fane,
 Or in what Heav'n-left age it fell,
 'Twere hard for modern song to tell : 100
 Yet still if truth those beams infuse
 Which guide at once and charm the Muse,
 Beyond yon braided clouds that lie
 Paving the light embroider'd sky,
 Amidst the bright pavilion'd plains 105
 The beauteous model still remains :
 There happier than in islands blest'd,
 Or bow'rs by Spring or Hebe dress'd,
 The chiefs who fill our Albion's story
 In warlike weeds retir'd in glory, 110
 Hear their consoled Druids sing
 Their triumphs to th' immortal string.

How may the poet now unfold,
 What never tongue or numbers told,
 How learn, delighted and amaz'd, 115
 What hands unknown that fabric rais'd ?
 Ev'n now before his favour'd eyes
 In Gothic pride it seems to rise !
 Yet Grecia's graceful orders join
 Majestic thro' the mix'd design : 120
 The secret builder knew to chuse
 Each sphere-found gem of richest hues ;
 Whate'er heaven's purer mould contains
 When nearer suns emblaze its veins :
 There on the walls the patriot's sight 125
 May ever hang with fresh delight,
 And, grav'd with some prophetic rage,
 Read Albion's fame thro' ev'ry age.
 Ye Forms Divine ! ye Laureate Band !
 That near her inmost altar stand, 130

Now sooth her, to her blissful train
 Blithe Concord's social form to gain;
 Concord! whose myrtle wand can steep
 E'en Anger's blood-shot eyes in sleep;
 Before whose breathing bosom's balm 135
 Rage drops his steel, and storms grow calm:
 Her let our fires and matrons hoar
 Welcome to Britain's ravag'd shore,
 Our youths, enamour'd of the fair,
 Play with the tangles of her hair, 140
 Till in one loud applauding sound
 The nations shout to her around,
 O! how supremely art thou blest!
 Thou, Lady! thou shalt rule the West! 144

ODE IX. TO EVENING.

IF aught of oaten stop or past'ral song
 May hope, chaste Eve! to sooth thy modest ear,
 Like thy own solemn springs,
 Thy springs and dying gales; 4
 O Nymph reserv'd! while now the bright-hair'd Sun
 Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
 With brede ethereal wove,
 O'erhang his wavy bed; 8
 Now air is hush'd, save where the weak-ey'd bat
 With short shrill shriek flits by on leathern wing,
 Or where the beetle winds
 His small but fullen horn, 12
 As oft he rises 'midst the twilight path,
 Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum;
 Now teach me, maid compos'd!
 To breathe some soften'd strain, 16
 Whose numbers stealing thro' thy dark'ning vale
 May not unseemly with its stillness suit,
 As musing slow I hail
 Thy genial lov'd return: 20

For when thy folding-star arising shows
His paly circlet, at his warning lamp
The fragrant Hours and Elves,
Who slept in buds the day,

24

And many a Nymph, who wreathes her brows with
And sheds the fresh'ning dew, and, lovelier still, [sedge,
The pensive Pleasures sweet,
Prepare thy shadowy car:

28

Then let me rove some wild and heathy scene,
Or find some ruin 'midst its dreary dells,
Whose walls more awful nod
By thy religious gleams:

32

Or if chill blust'ring winds or driving rain
Prevent my willing feet be mine the hut
That from the mountain's sides
Views wilds and swelling floods,

36

And hamlets brown, and dim-discover'd spires,
And hears their simple bell, and marks o'er all
Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil.

40

While Spring shall pour his show'rs, as oft he wont,
And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest Eve!
While Summer loves to sport
Beneath thy ling'ring light;

44

While fallow Autumn fills thy lap with leaves,
Or Winter, yelling thro' the troublous air,
Affrights thy shrinking train,
And rudely rends thy robes;

48

So long, regardless of thy quiet rule,
Shall Fancy, Friendship, Science, smiling Peace,
Thy gentlest influence own,
And love thy favourite name!

52

ODE X. TO PEACE.

O THOU! who bad'st thy turtles bear
Swift from his grasp thy olden hair,

And fought'st thy native skies;
 When War, by vultures drawn from far,
 To Britain bent his iron car,
 And bid his storms arise:

Tir'd of rude tyrannic sway,
 Our youth shall fix some festive day
 His sullen shrines to burn:
 But thou, who hear'st the turning spheres,
 What sounds may charm thy partial ears,
 And gain thy bleis'd return?

12

O Peace! thy injur'd robes up-bind;
 O rise, and leave not one behind
 Of all thy beamy train!
 The British Lion, Goddess sweet!
 Lies stretch'd on earth to kiss thy feet,
 And own thy holier reign.

18

Let others court thy transient smile,
 But come to grace thy Western Isle,
 By warlike Honour led;
 And while around her ports rejoice,
 While all her sons adore thy choice,
 With him for ever wed.

24

ODE XI. THE MANNERS.

FAREWEL, for clearer ken design'd,
 The dim-discover'd tracks of mind,
 Truths which, from Action's paths retir'd,
 My silent search in vain requir'd.
 No more my sail that deep explores,
 No more I search those magic shores,
 What regions part the world of soul,
 Or whence thy streams, Opinion, roll:
 If e'er I round such fairy field,
 Some pow'r impart the spear and shield
 At which the wizard Passions fly,
 By which the giant Follies die!

10

Farewel the porch whose roof is seen
 Arch'd with th' enliv'ning olive's green;
 Where Science, prank'd in tissu'd vest,
 By Reason, Pride, and Fancy drest,
 Comes like a bride, so trim array'd,
 To wed with Doubt in Plato's shade!

15

Youth of the quick uncheated sight,
 Thy walks, Observance, more invite.
 O thou! who lov'st that ampler range
 Where Life's wide prospects round thee change,
 And with her mingled sons ally'd
 Throw'st the prattling page aside,
 To me in converse sweet impart,
 To read in man the native heart;
 To learn, where Science sure is found,
 From Nature as she lives around,
 And gazing oft her mirror true,
 By turns each shifting image view,
 Till meddling Art's officious lore
 Reverse the lessons taught before,
 Alluring from a safer rule
 To dream in her enchanted school.
 Thou, heaven! whate'er of great we boast,
 Hast blest this social science most.

20

30

35

Retiring hence to thoughtful cell,
 As Fancy breathes her potent spell,
 Not vain she finds the charming task
 In pageant quaint, in motley mask.
 Behold! before her musing eyes
 The countless Manners round her rise,
 While, ever varying as they pass,
 To some Contempt applies her glass:
 With these the white-rob'd maids combine,
 And those the laughing Satyrs join.
 But who is he whom now she views
 In robe of wild contending hues?
 Thou by the Passions nurs'd, I greet
 The comic sock that binds thy feet!

40

45

50

O Humour! thou whose name is known
 To Britain's favour'd isle alone,
 Me too amidst thy band admit,
 There where the young-ey'd healthful Wit,
 (Whose jewels in his crisped hair
 Are plac'd each other's beams to share,
 Whom no delights from thee divide)
 In laughter loos'd attends thy side.

55

By old Miletus*, who so long
 Has ceas'd his love-inwoven song;
 By all you taught the Tuscan maids
 In chang'd Italia's modern shades;
 By him whose Knight's distinguish'd name†
 Refin'd a nation's lust of fame,
 Whose tales ev'n now with echoes sweet
 Castilia's Moorish hills repeat;
 Or him whom Seine's blue nymphs deplore‡
 In watchet weeds on Gallia's shore,
 Who drew the sad Sicilian maid
 By virtues in her fire betray'd:

60

65

70

O Nature boon! from whom proceed
 Each forceful thought, each prompted deed,
 If but from thee I hope to feel,
 On all my heart imprint thy seal!
 Let some retreating Cynic find
 Those oft-turn'd scrolls I leave behind;
 The sports and I this hour agree
 To rove thy scene-full world with thee!

ODE XII. THE PASSIONS.

AN ODE FOR MUSIC.

WHEN Music, heavenly Maid! was young,
 While yet in early Greece she sung,
 The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
 Throng'd around her magic cell;
 Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting,
 Possess'd beyond the Muse's painting,
 By turns thy felt the glowing mind
 Disturb'd, delighted, rais'd, refin'd;
 Till once, 'tis said, when all were fir'd,
 Fill'd with fury, rapt, inspir'd,
 From the supporting myrtles round
 They snatch'd her instruments of sound;
 And as they oft had heard apart
 Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
 Each, for Madness rul'd the hour,
 Would prove his own expressive pow'r.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
 Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
 And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
 E'en at the sound himself had made.

Next Anger rush'd, his eyes on fire
 In lightnings own'd his secret stings;
 In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
 And swept with hurried hand the strings.

With woeful measures wan Despair—
 Low sullen sounds his grief beguil'd;
 A solemn, strange, and mingled air!
 'Twas sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.

But thou, O Hope! with eyes so fair,
 What was thy delighted measure?
 Still it whisper'd promis'd pleasure,
 And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail!
 Still would her touch the strain prolong,
 And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
 She call'd on Echo still thro' all the song;

And where her sweetest theme she chose,
 A soft responsive voice was heard at ev'ry close ;
 And Hope enchanted smil'd, and wav'd her golden hair.
 And longer had she sung—but with a frown
 Revenge impatient rose ; 40
 He threw his blood-stain'd sword in thunder down,
 And with a withering look
 The war-denouncing trumpet took,
 And blew a blast so loud and dread,
 Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe ; 45
 And ever and anon he beat
 The doubling drum with furious heat ;
 And tho' sometimes, each dreary pause between,
 Dejected Pity at his side
 Her soul-subduing voice apply'd, 50
 Yet still he kept his wild unalter'd mein,
 While each strain'd ball of sight seem'd bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, Jealousy ! to nought were fix'd ;
 Sad proof of thy distressful state ;
 Of diff'ring themes the veering song was mix'd, 55
 And now it courted Love, now raving call'd on Hate.

With eyes up-rais'd, as one inspir'd,
 Pale Melancholy sat retir'd,
 And from her wild sequester'd seat,
 In notes by distance made more sweet, 60
 Pour'd thro' the mellow horn her pensive soul,
 And dashing soft from rocks around
 Bubbling runnels join'd the sound ;
 Thro' glades and glooms the mingled measure stole,
 Or o'er some haunted streams with fond delay, 65
 Round an holy calm diffusing,
 Love of peace and lonely musing,
 In hollow murmurs dy'd away.
 But O ! how alter'd was its sprightlier tone !
 When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue, 70
 Her bow across her shoulder flung,
 Her buskins gemm'd with morning dew,

Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung,
 The hunter's call to Faun and Dryad known;
 The oak-crown'd sisters, and their chaste-ey'd queen,
 Satyrs and Sylvan boys were seen 76
 Peeping from forth their alleys green;
 Brown Exercise rejoic'd to hear,
 And Sport leapt up, and seiz'd his beechen spear.
 Last came Joy's ecstatic trial: 80
 He, with viny crown advancing,
 First to the lively pipe his hand addrest,
 But soon he saw the brisk-awakening viol,
 Whose sweet entrancing voice he lov'd the best,
 They would have thought who heard the strain 85
 They saw in Tempe's vale her native maids
 Amidst the festal sounding shades
 To some unweary'd minstrel dancing,
 While as his flying fingers kiss'd the strings
 Love fram'd with Mirth a gay fantastic round; 90
 Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound,
 And he, amidst his frolic play,
 As if he would the charming air repay,
 Shook thousand odours from his dewy wings.
 O Music! sphere-descended maid, 95
 Friend of Pleasure, Wisdom's aid,
 Why, Goddess! why to us deny'd?
 Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside?
 As in that lov'd Athenian bow'r
 You learn'd an all-commanding pow'r, 100
 Thy mimic soul, O Nymph endear'd!
 Can well recal what then it heard.
 Where is thy native simple heart,
 Devote to virtue, fancy, art?
 Arise, as in that elder time, 105
 Warm, energetic, chaste, sublime!
 Thy wonders in that god-like age
 Fill thy recording sister's page—
 'Tis said, and I believe the tale,
 Thy humblest reed could more prevail, 110

Had more of strength, diviner rage,
Than all which charms this laggard age;
Ev'n all at once together found
Cæcilia's mingled world of sound—
O bid our vain endeavours cease,
Revive the just designs of Greece;
Return in all thy simple state;
Confirm the tales her sons relate!

ODE XIII.

ON THE DEATH OF MR. THOMSON.

The Scene of the following Stanzas is supposed to lie on the Thames, near Richmond.

I.

IN yonder grave<sup>a</sup> a Druid lies,
Where slowly winds the stealing wave;
The year's best sweets shall duteous rise
To deck its Poet's sylvan grave.

II.

In yon deep bed of whisp'ring reeds
His airy harp † shall now be laid,
That he whose heart in sorrow bleeds
May love thro' life the soothing shade.

III.

Then maids and youths shall linger here,
And while its sounds at distance swell,
Shall sadly seem in Pity's ear
To her the woodland pilgrim's knell.

IV.

Remembrance oft shall haunt the shore
When 'Thames in summer wreaths is drest,
And oft suspend the dashing oar
To bid his gentle spirit rest!

V.

And oft as Ease and Health retire
To breezy lawn or forest deep,
The friend shall view yon whit'ning spire‡,
And 'mid the vary'd landscape weep.

VI.

But thou, who own'st that earthly bed,
Ah! what will ev'ry dirge avail?
Or tears which Love and Pity shed
That mourn beneath the gliding sail!

VII.

Yet lives there one whose heedless eye
Shall scorn thy pale shrine glimm'ring near?
With him, sweet Bard! may Fancy die,
And Joy desert the blooming year.

28

VIII.

But thou, lorn Stream! whose fullen tide
No sedge-crown'd sisters now attend,
Now waft me from the green hill's side
Whose cold turf hides the bury'd friend!

32

IX.

And see! the Fairy vallies fade,
Dun Night has veil'd the solemn view!
Yet once again dear parted Shade!
Meek Nature's Child! again adieu.

36

X.

The genial meads assign'd to bless
Thy life shall mourn thy early doom†!
Their hinds and shepherd-girls shall dress
With simple hands thy rural tomb.

40

XI.

Long, long, thy stone and pointed clay
Shall melt the musing Briton's eyes;
O Vales! and wild Woods! shall he say,
In yonder grave your Druid lies!

† Mr. Thomson resided in the neighbourhood of Richmond some time before his death.

OBSERVATIONS

ON THE ORIENTAL ECLOGUES.

THE genius of the Pastoral, as well as of every other respectable species of poetry, had its origin in the East, and from thence was transplanted by the Muses of Greece; but whether from the continent of the Lesser Asia, or from Egypt, which about the era of the Grecian Pastoral was the hospitable nurse of letters, it is not easy to determine. From the subjects and the manner of Theocritus one would incline to the latter opinion, while the history of Bion is in favour of the former.

However, though it should still remain a doubt through what channel the Pastoral travelled westward, there is not the least shadow of uncertainty concerning its oriental origin.

In those ages which, guided by sacred chronology, from a comparative view of time we call the Early Ages, it appears from the most authentic historians that the chiefs of the people employed themselves in rural exercises, and that astronomers and legislators were at the same time shepherds. Thus Strabo informs us that the history of the creation was communicated to the Egyptians by a Chaldean shepherd.

From these circumstances it is evident not only that such shepherds were capable of all the dignity and elegance peculiar to poetry, but that whatever poetry they attempted would be of the Pastoral kind; would take its subjects from those scenes of rural simplicity in which they were conversant, and, as it was the offspring of Harmony and Nature, would employ the powers it derived from the former to celebrate the beauty and benevolence of the latter.

Accordingly we find that the most ancient poems treat of agriculture, astronomy, and other objects within the rural and natural systems.

What constitutes the difference between the Georgic and the Pastoral is love, and the colloquial or dramatic form of composition peculiar to the latter: this form of composition is sometimes dispensed with, and love and rural imagery alone are thought sufficient to distinguish the Pastoral. The tender passion, however, seems to be essential to this species of poetry, and is hardly ever excluded from those pieces that were intended to come under this denomination: even in those Eclogues of the Amœbean kind, whose only purport is a trial of skill between contending shepherds, love has its usual share, and the praises of their respective mistresses are the general subjects of the competitors.

It is to be lamented that scarce any oriental compositions of this kind have survived the ravages of Ignorance, Tyranny, and Time: we cannot doubt that many such have been extant, possibly as far down as that fatal period, never to be mentioned in the world of letters without horror, when the glorious monuments of human ingenuity perished in the ashes of the Alexandrian library.

Those ingenious Greeks, whom we call the Parents of Pastoral poetry, were probably no more than imitators, that derived their harmony from higher and remoter sources, and kindled their poetical fires at those then unextinguished lamps which burned within the tombs of oriental genius.

It is evident that Homer has availed himself of those magnificent images and descriptions so frequently to be met with in the books of the Old Testament.

And as the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament was performed at the request, and under the patronage, of Ptolemy Phaladelphus, it were not to be wondered if Theocritus, who was entertained at that prince's court, had borrowed some part of his pastoral imagery from the poetical passages of those books.

In consequence of the peculiarities of the eastern style so ill adapted to the frigid genius of the north, Mr. Collins could make but little use of it as a precedent for his Oriental Eclogues; and even in his third Eclogue, where the subject is of a similar nature, he has chosen rather to follow the mode of the Doric and the Latin Pastoral.

The scenery and subjects, then, of the following

Eclogues alone are oriental ; the style and colouring are purely European ; and for this reason the author's preface, in which he intimates that he had the originals from a merchant who traded to the east, is omitted, as being now altogether superfluous.

With regard to the merit of these Eclogues, it may justly be asserted, that in simplicity of description and expression, in delicacy and softness of numbers, and in natural and unaffected tenderness, they are not to be equalled by any thing of the Pastoral kind in the English language.

ECLOGUE I.

THIS Eclogue, which is entitled Selim ; or, The Shepherd's Moral, as there is nothing dramatic in the subject, may be thought the least entertaining of the four ; but it is by no means the least valuable. The moral precepts which the intelligent shepherd delivers to his fellow swains, and the virgins their companions, are such as would infallibly promote the happiness of the Pastoral life.

In impersonating the private virtues, the poet has observed great propriety, and has formed their genealogy with the most perfect judgment, when he represents them as the daughters of truth and wisdom.

The characteristics of modesty and chastity are extremely happy and peinturesque ;

Come thou, whose thoughts as limpid springs are clear ;
To lead the train, sweet Modesty ! appear :
With thee be Chastity, of all afraid,
Distrusting all, a wife, suspicious maid ;
Cold is her breast, like flow'rs that drink the dew,
A silken veil conceals her from the view.

The two families borrowed from rural objects are not only much in character, but perfectly natural and expressive. There is, notwithstanding, this defect in the former, that it wants a peculiar propriety ; for purity of thought may as well be applied to chastity as to modesty ; and from this instance, as well as from a thousand more, we may see the necessity of distinguishing, in characteristic poetry, every object by marks and attributes peculiarly its own.

It cannot be objected to this eclogue that it wants both those essential criteria of the pastoral, love and the drama; for though it partakes not of the latter, the former still retains an interest in it, and that too very material, as it professedly consults the virtue and happiness of the lover, while it informs what are the qualities

----- that must lead to love.

ECLOGUE II.

ALL the advantages that any species of poetry can derive from the novelty of the subject and scenery this eclogue possesses. The rout of a camel-driver is a scene that scarce could exist in the imagination of an European, and of its attendant distresses he could have no idea. These are very happily and minutely painted by our descriptive Poet. What sublime simplicity of expression! what nervous plainness in the opening of the poem!

In silent horror o'er the boundless waste
The driver Hassan with his camels past,

The magic pencil of the Poet brings the whole scene before us at once, as it were by enchantment, and in this single couplet we feel all the effect that arises from the terrible wildness of a region unenlivened by the habitations of men. The verses that describe so minutely the camel-driver's little provisions have a touching influence on the imagination, and prepare the reader to enter more feelingly into his future apprehensions of distress;

Bethink thee, Hassan! where shall Thirst assuage,
When fails this cruise, his unrelenting rage?

Mr. Collins speaks like a true poet, as well in sentiment as expression, when, with regard to the thirst of wealth, he says,

Why heed we not, while mad we haste along,
The gentle voice of Peace, or Pleasure's song?
Or wherefore think the flow'ry mountain's side,
The fountain's murmurs, and the valley's pride;
Why think we these less pleasing to behold
Than dreary deserts, if they lead to gold?

But however just these sentiments may appear to those who have not revolted from nature and simplicity, had the Author proclaimed them in Lombard-street or Cheapside he would not have been complimented with the understanding of the bell-man. A striking proof that our own particular ideas of happiness regulate our opinions concerning the sense and wisdom of others!

It is impossible to take leave of this most beautiful eclogue without paying the tribute of admiration so justly due to the following nervous lines;

What if the lion in his rage I meet!-----
Oft in the dust I view his printed feet;
And fearful oft, when Days declining light
Yields her pale empire to the mourner Night;
By hunger rous'd he scours the groaning plain
Gaunt wolves and sullen tigers in his train;
Before them Death with shrieks directs their way,
Fills the wild yell, and leads them to their prey.

This, amongst many other passages to be met with in the writings of Collins, shews that his genius was perfectly capable of the grand and magnificent in description, notwithstanding what a learned writer has advanced to the contrary. Nothing certainly could be more greatly conceived, or more adequately expressed, than the image in the last couplet.

ECLOGUE III.

THAT innocence and native simplicity of manners which, in the first eclogue, was allowed to constitute the happiness of love, is here beautifully described in its effects. The Sultan of Persia marries a Georgian shepherdess, and finds in her embraces that genuine felicity which unperverted nature alone can bestow. The most natural and beautiful parts of this eclogue are those where the fair Sultana refers with so much pleasure to her Pastoral amusements, and those scenes of happy innocence in which she had passed her early years; particularly when, upon her first departure,

Oft as she went she backward turn'd her view,
And bade that crook and bleating flock adieu.

This picture of amiable simplicity reminds one of that passage where Prosperpine, when carried off by Pluto, regrets the loss of the flowers she had been gathering:

Collecti flores tunicis cecidere remissis:
Tantaque simplicitas puerilibus adfuit annis,
Hæc quoque virgineum movit jactura dolorem.

ECLOGUE IV.

THE beautiful but unfortunate country where the scene of this pathetic eclogue is laid had been recently torn in pieces by the depredations of its savage neighbours, when Mr. Collins so affectingly described its misfortunes. This ingenious man had not only a pencil to pourtray, but a heart to feel for the miseries of mankind; and it is with the utmost tenderness and humanity he enters into the narrative of Circassia's ruin, while he realizes the scene, and brings the present drama before us. Of every circumstance that could possibly contribute to the tender effect this Pastoral was designed to produce, the Poet has availed himself with the utmost art and address.

The opening of the dialogue is equally happy, natural, and unaffected, when one of the shepherds, weary and overcome with the fatigue of flight, calls upon his companion to review the length of way they had passed. This is certainly painting from nature, and the thoughts, however obvious, or destitute of refinement, are perfectly in character. But as the closest pursuit of nature is the surest way to excellence in general, and to sublimity in particular, in poetical description, so we find that this simple suggestion of the shepherd is not unattended with magnificence: there is grandeur and variety in the landscape he describes;

And first review that long-extended plain,
And yon wide groves, already past with pain;
Yon ragged cliff, whose dang'rous path we try'd,
And last this lofty mountain's weary side.

There is, in imitative harmony, an act of expressing a slow and difficult movement by adding to the usual number of pauses in a verse. This is observable in the line that describes the ascent of the mountain;

And last || this lofty mountain's || weary side ||.

Here we find the number of pauses, or musical bars, which in an heroic verse is commonly two, increased to three.

Nothing can be more beautifully conceived, or more pathetically expressed, than the shepherd's apprehensions for his fair country-women, exposed to the ravages of the invaders;

In vain Circassia boasts her spicy groves,
For ever fam'd for pure and happy loves:
In vain she boasts her fairest of the fair,
Their eyes' blue languish, and their golden hair!

Those eyes in tears their fruitless grief shall send
Those hairs the Tartar's cruel hand shall rend.

There is certainly some very powerful charm in the liquid melody of sounds. The editor of these poems could never read or hear the following verse repeated without a degree of pleasure otherwise entirely unaccountable ;

Their eyes' blue languish, and their golden hair.

Such are the Oriental Eclogues, which we leave with the same kind of anxious pleasure we feel upon a temporary parting with a beloved friend.

OBSERVATIONS

ON THE ODES DESCRIPTIVE AND ALLEGORICAL.

THE genius of Collins was capable of every degree of excellence in lyric poetry, and perfectly qualified for that high province of the Muse. Possessed of a native ear for all the varieties of harmony and modulation, susceptible of the finest feelings of tenderness and humanity, but, above all, carried away by that high enthusiasm which gives to imagination its strongest colouring, he was at once capable of soothing the ear with the melody of his numbers, of influencing the passions by the force of his pathos, and of gratifying the fancy by the luxury of his description.

In consequence of these powers, but more particularly in consideration of the last, he chose such subjects for his lyric essays as were most favourable for the indulgence of description and allegory ; where he could exercise his powers in moral and personal painting ; where he could exert his invention in conferring new attributes on images or objects already known, and described by a determinate number of characteristics ; where he might give an uncommon eclat to his figures, by placing them in happier attitudes, or in more advantageous lights, and introduce new forms from the moral and intellectual world into the society of impersonated beings.

Such no doubt were the privileges which the Poet expected, and such were the advantages he derived from the descriptive and allegorical nature of his themes.

It seems to have been the whole industry of our Author (and it is at the same time, almost all the claim to moral excellence his writings can boast) to promote the influence of the social virtues, by painting them in the fairest and happiest lights.

“Melior fieri tuendo”

would be no improper motto to his poems in general, but of his lyric poems it seems to be the whole moral tendency and effect. If, therefore, it should appear to some readers that he has been more industrious to cultivate description than sentiment, it may be observed that his descriptions themselves are sentimental, and answer the whole end of that species of writing, by embellishing every feature of Virtue, and by conveying through the effects of the pencil the finest moral lessons to the mind.

Horace speaks of the fidelity of the ear in preference to the uncertainty of the eye; but if the mind receives conviction, it is certainly of very little importance through what medium, or by which of the senses it is conveyed. The impressions left on the imagination may possibly be thought less durable than the deposits of the memory; but it may very well admit of a question whether a conclusion of reason or an impression of imagination will soonest make its way to the heart. A moral precept, conveyed in words, is only an account of truth in its effects; a moral picture is truth exemplified; and which is most likely to gain upon the affections it may not be difficult to determine.

This however must be allowed, that those works approach the nearest to perfection which unite these powers and advantages; which at once influence the imagination and engage the memory; the former by the force of animated and striking description, the latter by a brief but harmonious conveyance of precept: thus while the heart is influenced through the operation of the passions or the fancy, the effect, which might otherwise have been transient, is secured by the co-operating power of the memory, which treasures up in a short aphorism the moral of the scene.

This is a good reason, and this perhaps is the only reason that can be given, why our dramatic performances should generally end with a chain of couplets: in these the moral of the whole piece is usually conveyed; and that assistance which the memory borrows from rhyme, as it was probably the original cause of it, gives it usefulness and propriety even there.

After these apologies for the descriptive turn of Mr. Collins's Odes, something remains to be said on the origin and use of allegory in poetical composition.

By this we are not to understand the trope in the schools, which is defined "aliud verbis, aliud sensu ostendere," and of which Quintilian says, "usus est, ut tristia dicamus melioribus verbis, aut bonæ rei gratia quædam contrariis significemus," &c. It is not the verbal but the sentimental allegory, not allegorical expression (which might indeed come under the term of Metaphor), but allegorical imagery, that is here in question.

When we endeavour to trace this species of figurative sentiment to its origin, we find it coeval with literature itself. It is generally agreed that the most ancient productions are poetical, and it is certain that the most ancient poems abound with allegorical imagery.

If, then, it be allowed that the first literary productions were poetical, we shall have little or no difficulty in discovering the origin of allegory.

At the birth of letters, in the transition from hieroglyphical to literal expression, it is not to be wondered if the custom of expressing ideas by personal images, which had so long prevailed, should still retain its influence on the mind, though the use of letters had rendered the practical application of it superfluous. Those who had been accustomed to express strength by the image of an elephant, swiftness by that of a panther, courage by that of a lion, would make no scruple of substituting, in letters, the symbols for the ideas they had been used to represent.

Here we plainly see the origin of allegorical expression, that it arose from the ashes of hieroglyphics;

and if to the same cause we should refer that figurative boldness of style and imagery which distinguish the oriental writings, we shall perhaps conclude more justly than if we should impute it to the superior grandeur of eastern genius.

From the same source with the verbal we are to derive the sentimental allegory, which is nothing more than a continuation of the metaphorical or symbolical expression of the several agents in an action, or the different objects in a scene.

The latter most peculiarly comes under the denomination of all allegorical imagery; and in this species of allegory we include the impersonation, of passions, affections, virtues, and vices, &c. on account of which principally these Odes were properly termed by their author Allegorical.

With respect to the utility of this figurative writing, the same arguments that have been advanced in favour of descriptive poetry will be of weight likewise here. It is indeed from impersonation, or, as it is commonly termed, personification, that poetical description borrows its chief powers and graces. Without the aid of this, moral and intellectual painting would be flat and unanimated; and even the scenery of material objects would be dull without the introduction of fictitious life.

These observations will be most effectually illustrated by the sublime and beautiful Odes that occasioned them: in those it will appear how happily this allegorical painting may be executed by the genuine powers of poetical genius, and they will not fail to prove its force and utility by passing through the imagination to the heart.

ODE I. TO PITY.

By Pella's hard, a magic name,
By all the griefs his thought could frame,
Receive my humble rite!
Long, Pity! let the nations view
Thy sky-worn robes of tend'rest blue,
And eyes of dewy light.

The propriety of invoking Pity through the mediation of Euripides is obvious. That admirable poet had the keys of all the tender passions, and therefore could not but stand in the highest esteem with a writer of Mr. Collins's sensibility.

The eyes of dewy light is one of the happiest strokes of imagination, and may be ranked among those expressions which -----give us back the image of the mind.

Wild Arun too has heard thy strains,
And Echo 'midst my native plains
Been sooth'd with Pity's lute :
There first the wren thy myrtles shed
On gentlest Otway's infant head.

Suffex, in which county the Arun is a small river, had the honour of giving birth to Otway as well as Collins : both these poets, unhappily, became the objects of that pity by which their writings are distinguished.— There was a similitude in their genius and in their sufferings ; there was a resemblance in the misfortunes and in the dissipation of their lives ; and the circumstances of their death cannot be remembered without pain.

The thought of painting in the temple of Pity the history of human misfortunes, and of drawing the scenes from the Tragic Muse, is very happy, and in every respect worthy the imagination of Collins.

ODE II. TO FEAR.

Mr. Collins, who had often determined to apply himself to dramatic poetry, seems here, with the same view, to have addressed one of the principal powers of the drama, and to implore that mighty influence she had given to the genius of Shakespeare ;

Hither again thy fury deal ;
Teach me but once like him to feel ;
His cypress wreath my meed decree,
And I, Oh Fear ! will dwell with thee.

In the construction of this nervous ode, the Author has shewn equal power of judgment and imagination. Nothing can be more striking than the violent and abrupt abbreviation of the measure in the fifth and sixth verses, when he feels the strong influences of the power he invokes ;

Ah, Fear ! ah, frantic Fear !
I see, I see thee near !

The editor of these poems has met with nothing in the same species of poetry, either in his own or in any other language, equal in all respects, to the following description of Danger;

Danger, whose limbs of giant mould
What mortal eye can fix'd behold?
Who stalks his round, an hideous form!
Howling amidst the midnight storm,
Or throws him on the ridgy steep
Of some loose hanging rock to sleep.

It is impossible to contemplate the image conveyed in the two last verses without those emotions of terror it was intended to excite.

That nutritive enthusiasm which cherishes the seeds of poetry, and which is indeed the only soil wherein they will grow to perfection, lays open the mind to all the influences of fiction. A passion for whatever is greatly wild or magnificent in the works of Nature, seduces the imagination to attend to all that is extravagant, however unnatural. Milton was notoriously fond of high romance and Gothic diableries; and Collins, who in genius and enthusiasm bore no very distant resemblance to Milton, was wholly carried away by the same attachments:

Be mine to read the visions old
Which thy awak'ning bards have told;
And lest thou meet my blasted view,
Hold each strange tale devoutly true.

On that thrice hallo-w'd eve, &c.] There is an old traditionary superstition, that on St. Mark's eve the forms of all such persons as shall die within the ensuing year make their solemn entry into the churches of their respective parishes, as St. Patrick swam over the Channel, without their heads.

ODE III. TO SIMPLICITY.

The measure of the ancient ballad seems to have been made choice of for this ode on account of the subject; and it has indeed an air of Simplicity not altogether unaffecting;

By all the honey'd store,
On Hybla's thymy shore;
By all her blooms and mingled murmurs dear;
By her whose love-lorn woe
In ev'ning musings flow
Scotch'd sweetly sad Electra's poet's ear.

This allegorical imagery of the honey'd store, the blooms and mingled murmurs of Hybla alluding to the sweetness and beauty of Attic poetry, has the finest and the happiest effect.

ODE IV.

ON THE POETICAL CHARACTER.

Procul! O! procul este profani!

This ode is so infinitely abstracted, and replete with high enthusiasm, that it will find few readers capable of entering into the spirit of it, or of relishing its beauties. There is a style of sentiment as utterly unintelligible to common capacities as if the subject were treated in an unknown language; and it is on the same account that abstracted poetry will never have many admirers. The authors of such poems must be content with the approbation of those heaven-favoured geniuses who, by a similarity of taste and sentiment, are enabled to penetrate the high mysteries of inspired fancy, and to pursue the loftiest flights of enthusiastic imagination. Nevertheless the praise of the distinguished few is certainly preferable to the applause of the undiscerning million; for all praise is valuable in proportion to the judgment of those who confer it.

As the subject of this ode is uncommon, so are the style and expression highly metaphorical and abstracted; thus the sun is called "the rich-hair'd youth of Morn;" the ideas are termed "the shadowy tribes of Mind," &c. We are struck with the propriety of this mode of expression here, and it affords us new proofs of the analogy that subsists between language and sentiment.

Nothing can be more loftily imagined than the creation of the cestus of Fancy in this ode; the allegorical imagery is rich and sublime; and the observation that the dangerous passions kept aloof during the operation is founded on the strictest philosophical truth; for poetical fancy can exist only in minds that are perfectly serene, and in some measure abstracted from the influences of sense.

The scene of Milton's "inspiring hour" is perfectly in character, and described with all those wild-wood appearances of which the great poet was so enthusiastically fond ;

I view that oak the fancy'd glade among,
By which as Milton lay, his ev'ning ear,

ODE V. TO A LADY.

ON THE DEATH OF COLONEL CHARLES ROSS.

In the Action of Fontenoy.

Written May, 1745.

The iambic kind of numbers in which this ode is conceived, seems as well calculated for tender and plaintive subjects as for those where strength or rapidity is required. This perhaps is owing to the repetition of the strain in the same stanza ; for sorrow rejects variety, and affects an uniformity of complaint. It is needless to observe that this ode is replete with harmony, spirit, and pathos : and there surely appears no reason why the seventh and eighth stanzas should be omitted in that copy printed in Doddsley's Collection of Poems.

ODE VI.

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR, 1746.

ODE VII. TO MERCY.

The ode written in 1746, and the ode to Mercy, seem to have been written on the same occasion, viz. the late rebellion ; the former in memory of those heroes who fell in defence of their country ; the latter to excite sentiments of compassion in favour of those unhappy and deluded wretches who became a sacrifice to public justice.

ODE VIII. TO LIBERTY.

The ancient states of Greece, perhaps the only ones in which a perfect model of Liberty ever existed, are naturally brought to view in the opening of the poem ;

Who shall awake the Spartan fire,
And call in solemn sounds to life
The youths whose locks divinely spreading,
Like vernal Hyacinths in fullen hue? &c.

There is something extremely bold in the imagery of the locks of the Spartan youths.

The fall of Rome is here most nervously described in one line ;

With heaviest sound a giant-statue fell.

The thought seems altogether new, and the imitative harmony in the structure of the verse is admirable.

After bewailing the ruin of ancient Liberty, the poet considers the influence it has retained, or still retains among the moderns ; and here the free republics of Italy naturally engage his attention. Florence, indeed, only to be lamented on the account of losing its liberty under those patrons of letters, the Medicean family ; the jealous Pisa, justly so called in respect to its long impatience and regret under the same yoke ; and the small Marino, which, however unrespectable with regard to power or extent of territory, has at least this distinction to boast, that it has preserved its Liberty longer than any other state ancient or modern, having, without any revolution, retained its present mode of government near 1400 years. Moreover, the patron-saint who founded it, and from whom it takes its name, deserves this poetical record, as he is perhaps the only saint that ever contributed to the establishment of freedom.

Nor e'er her former pride relate
To sad Liguria's bleeding state.

In these lines the poet alludes to those ravages in the state of Genoa occasioned by the unhappy divisions of the Gulphs and Gibelines.

----When the favour'd of thy choice,
The daring archer, heard thy voice.

For an account of the celebrated event referred to in these verses, see Voltaire's Epistle to the King of Prussia.

Those whom the rod of Alva bruis'd,
Whose crown a British queen refus'd.

The Flemings were so dreadfully oppressed by this sanguinary general of Philip II. that they offered their sovereignty to Elizabeth, but, happily for her subjects, she had policy and magnanimity enough to refuse it.

ODE IX. TO EVENING.

The blank ode has for some time solicited admission into the English poetry, but its efforts hitherto seem to have been vain, at least its reception has been no more than partial. It remains a question, then, whether there is not something in the nature of blank verse less adapted to the lyric than to the heroic measure, since though it has been generally received in the latter, it is yet unadopted in the former. In order to discover this, we are to consider the different modes of these different species of poetry. That of the heroic is uniform, that of the lyric is various; and in these circumstances of uniformity and variety probably lies the cause why blank verse has been successful in the one, and unacceptable in the other. While it presented itself only in one form, it was familiarized to the ear by custom; but where it was obliged to assume the different shapes of the lyric Muse, it seemed still a stranger of uncouth figure, was received rather with curiosity than pleasure, and entertained without that ease or satisfaction which acquaintance and familiarity produce. Moreover, the heroic blank verse obtained a sanction of infinite importance to its general reception when it was adopted by one of the greatest poets the world ever produced, and was made the vehicle of the noblest poem that ever was written. When this poem at length extorted that applause which ignorance and prejudice had united to withhold, the versification soon found its imitators, and became more generally successful than even in those countries from whence it was imported. But lyric blank verse has met with no such advantages; for Mr. Collins, whose genius and judgment in harmony might have given it so powerful an effect, hath left us but one specimen of it in the Ode to Evening.

In the choice of his measure he seems to have had in his eye Horace's Ode to Pyrrha; for this ode bears the nearest resemblance to that mixt kind of the asclepiad and pherecratic verse; and that resemblance in some degree reconciles us to the want of rhyme, while it reminds us of those great masters of antiquity whose works had no need of this whimsical gingle of sounds.

From the following passage one might be induced to think that the poet had it in view to render his subject and his versification suitable to each other on this occasion, and that when he addressed himself to the sober power of Evening, he had thought proper to lay aside the foppery of rhyme ;

Now teach me, Maid compos'd !
To breathe some soften'd strain,
Whose numbers stealing thro' thy dark'ning vale
May not unseemly with its stillness suit,
As musing slow I hail
Thy genial lov'd return.

But whatever were the numbers or the versification of this ode, the imagery and enthusiasm it contains could not fail of rendering it delightful : no other of Mr. Collins's odes is more generally characteristic of his genius.

It might be a sufficient encomium on this beautiful ode to observe, that it has been particularly admired by a lady to whom Nature has given the most perfect principles of taste. She has not even complained of the want of rhyme in it, a circumstance by no means unfavourable to the cause of lyric blank verse ; for surely if a fair reader can endure an ode without bells and chimes, the masculine genius may dispense with them.

ODE X. TO PEACE.

ODE XI. THE MANNERS.

From the subject and sentiments of this ode, it seems not improbable that the author wrote it about the time when he left the university ; when, weary with the pursuit of academical studies, he no longer confined himself to the search of theoretical knowledge, but commenced the scholar of humanity, to study Nature in her works and man in society.

The following farewell to Science exhibits a very just as well as striking picture ; for however exalted in theory the Platonic doctrines may appear, it is certain that Platonism and Pyrrhonism are nearly allied ;

Farewel the porch whose roof is seen
Arch'd with th' enliv'ning olive's green ;
Where Science, prank'd in tissu'd vest,
By Reason, Pride, and Fancy drest,
Comes like a bride, so trim array'd,
To wed with Doubt in Plato's shade.

When the mind goes in pursuit of visionary systems it is not far from the regions of doubt ; and the greater its capacity to think abstractedly, to reason and refine, the more it will be exposed to and bewildered in uncertainty. From an enthusiastic warmth of temper, indeed, we may for a while be encouraged to persist in some favourite doctrine, or to adhere to some adopted system ; but when that enthusiasm which is founded on the vivacity of the passions gradually cools and dies away with them, the opinions it supported drop from us, and we are thrown upon the inhospitable shore of doubt—A striking proof of the necessity of some moral rule of wisdom and virtue, and some system of happiness, established by unerring knowledge and unlimited power.

In the poet's address to Humour in this ode, there is one image of singular beauty and propriety. The ornaments in the hair of Wit are of such a nature, and disposed in such a manner, as to be perfectly symbolical and characteristic ;

Me too amidst thy band admit,
There where the young-ey'd healthful Wit,
(Whose jewels in his crisped hair
Are plac'd each other's beams to share,
Whom no delights from thee divide)
In laughter loos'd attends thy side.

Nothing could be more expressive of wit, which consists in a happy collision of comparative and relative images, than this reciprocal reflection of light from the disposition of the jewels ;

O Humour ! thou whose name is known
To Britain's favour'd isle alone.

The author could only mean to apply this to the time when he wrote, since other nations had produced works of great humour, as he himself acknowledges afterwards ;

By old Miletus, &c.
By all you taught the Tuscan maids, &c.

The Milesian and Tuscan romances were by no means distinguished for humour, but as they were the models of that species of writing in which humour was afterwards employed, they are probably for that reason only mentioned here.

ODE XII. THE PASSIONS.

If the music which was composed for this ode had equal merit with the ode itself, it must have been the most excellent performance of the kind, in which poetry and music have, in modern times, united. Other pieces of the same nature have derived their greatest reputation from the perfection of the music that accompanied them, having in themselves little more merit than that of an ordinary ballad; but in this we have the whole soul and power of poetry—expression that, even without the aid of music, strikes to the heart; and imagery of power enough to transport the attention, without the forceful alliance of corresponding sounds: what, then, must have been the effect of these united!

It is very observable, that though the measure is the same in which the musical efforts of Fear, Anger, and Despair, are described, yet by the variation of the cadence the character and operation of each is strongly expressed; thus particularly of Despair;

With woeful measures wan Despair---
Low sullen sounds his grief beguil'd;
A solemn, strange, and mingled air!
'Twas sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.

He must be a very unskilful composer who could not catch the power of imitative harmony from these lines.

The picture of Hope, that follows this is beautiful almost beyond imitation. By the united powers of imagery and harmony, that delightful being is exhibited with all the charms and graces that pleasure and fancy have appropriated to her:

Relegat, qui semel percurrit;
Qui nunquam legit, legat.
But thou, o Hope! with eyes so fair,
What was thy delighted measure?
Still it whisper'd promis'd pleasure,
And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail!
Still would her touch the strain prolong,
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
She call'd on Echo still thro' all the song;
And where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at every close;
And Hope enchanted smil'd, and wav'd her golden hair.

In what an exalted light does the above stanza place this great master of poetical imagery and harmony! what varied sweetness of numbers! what delicacy of judgment and expression! how characteristically does Hope prolong her strain! repeat her soothing closes! call upon her associate Echo for the same purposes! and display every pleasing grace peculiar to her!

And Hope enchanted smil'd, and wav'd her golden hair.
 Legat, qui nunquam legit,
 Qui semel percurrit relegat.

The descriptions of Joy, Jealousy, and Revenge, are excellent, though not equally so: those of Melancholy and Cheerfulness are superior to every thing of the kind: and upon the whole, there may be very little hazard in asserting that this is the finest ode in the English language.

ODE XIII. ON THOMSON'S DEATH.

The ode on the death of Thomson seems to have been written in an excursion to Richmond by water. The rural scenery has a proper effect in an ode to the memory of a poet much of whose merit lay in descriptions of the same kind, and the appellations of Druid and meek Nature's Child are happily characteristic. For the better understanding of this ode, it is necessary to remember that Mr. Thomson lies buried in the church of Richmond.
